Broadcast Premiere of Four-Part Film Series, STANDING ON SACRED GROUND Series Features Kaho`olawe Story

KHET broadcasts May 9 and 16 at 9pm

Berkeley, CA (Tuesday May 5, 2015): Standing on Sacred Ground, a four-part documentary series, eight years in the making, on Indigenous struggles over sacred sites, will enjoy its broadcast premiere in Hawai'i on KHET and nationally on The PBS World Channel.

KHET in Honolulu will broadcast the first two films in the series on Saturday, May 9 and the final two episodes on Saturday, May 16. Profit and Loss airs on Saturday May 9 at 9pm followed by Pilgrims and Tourists at 10pm. The following weekend, on Saturday, May 16, KHET will broadcast Islands of Sanctuary at 9pm followed by Fire and Ice at 10pm. The films will run on all three KHET channels: KHETDT, KHETOC and KMEB.

The films premier on The WORLDChannel, Sunday, May 17 at 9pm ET, with the next three episodes running weekly through June 7, 2015.

Islands of Sanctuary (May 16@9pm) features the story of Kaho`olawe and was produced in collaboration with the Protect Kaho`olawe `Ohana. "The broadcast of the Kaho`olawe segment is timely, in light of the islandwide and international focus on protecting the sacred mountain of Mauna Kea," said Luana Busby-Neff, founding member of the `Ohana. "The Kaho`olawe movement awakened my generation's ancestral knowledge of and kuleana (responsibility) for sacred places through advocating Aloha `Aina. Kaho`olawe is sacred to Kanaloa, the Hawaiian god of the ocean and Mauna A Wākeais the sacred offspring of Wākea (sky father) and Papa (earth mother). The series as a whole shows that we are part of a global movement of indigenous peoples protecting sacred places to sustain the health of our natural world."

Standing on Sacred Ground, produced by the California-based Sacred Land Film Project, shares stories from eight Indigenous communities around the globe who are the protectors of sacred places, as part of a growing movement to defend human rights, protect culture and restore the environment. In the series, Native people share ecological wisdom and spiritual reverence while battling government megaprojects, consumer culture, competing religions, resource extraction and climate change.

In episode one, Pilgrims and Tourists, Indigenous shamans of the Altai Republic of Russia and northern California's WinnememWintufind common ground protecting their sacred mountains from major government projects: Shasta Dam and theGazprom pipeline. In episode two, Profit and Loss, from Papua New Guinea to the tar sands of Alberta, Canada, Native people work to protect their ancestral land, life giving water and community health from international mining and oil corporations. In episode three, Fire and Ice, from the Gamo Highlands of Ethiopia to the Andes of Peru, Indigenous communities protect their sacred lands from development, competing religions and climate change.

In the final episode Islands of Sanctuary, Native Hawaiians and Aboriginal Australians resist threats to their sacred places. In Australia's Northern Territory, Aboriginal clans maintain Indigenous Protected Areas and resist the destructive effects of a mining boom. In Hawai'i, indigenous ecological and spiritual practices are used to restore the sacred island of Kaho'olawe after 50 years of military use as a bombing range.

"Public television viewers will now have the opportunity to access global perspectives from a chorus of Indigenous voices defending against attacks on their resources, and on the future we share," said producer and director, Christopher "Toby" McLeod. "We are proud to partner with KHET, The WORLD Channel, NETA, VisionMaker Media and Pacific Islanders in Communications (PIC), who are constantly striving to provide public television stations with diverse, enlightening programming for their audiences."

Islands of Sanctuary was first screened in Hawai'i at the Maui Film Festival in 2013. The Standing on Sacred Ground series has screened to great acclaim around the world since its release at the Mill Valley Film Festival in October 2013. It received the Best Documentary Feature Award at the Native American Film Festival 2013 and director Toby McLeod received the John de Graaf Environmental Filmmaking Award at the Wild & Scenic Film Festival 2014. The Smithsonian National Museum of the American Indian screened the series last year as part of the U.S. Environmental Film Festival, and the films were featured at the World Parks Congress in Sydney, Australia, last November. The films have also been screening in the Altai Republic, Moscow, Peru and Papua New Guinea.

"We know having these films available to public television stations in May, timed with Asian Pacific American Heritage Month, will allow local stations to provide their viewers with important content that focuses on the issues facing many Native cultures in their areas," notes Leanne K. Ferrer, Executive Director of Pacific Islanders in Communications (PIC).

Praise for STANDING ON SACRED GROUND:

"Beautifully illuminates Indigenous peoples' resistance to environmental devastation and their determination to protect our common future." —Robert Redford

"Some of the finest minds on the planet are featured in this documentary—and they're talking about the biggest problems our planet has ever faced!" —Bill McKibben

In addition to The WORLD Channel premiere in May, NETA has distributed Standing on Sacred Ground to the full public broadcasting system for May 2015. To find out more about the series, visit www.StandingOnSacredGround.org.

About the Partners:

Standing on Sacred Ground is a co-production of Sacred Land Film Project and Pacific Islanders in Communications (PIC) in association with Vision Maker Media (VMM), with funding provided by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB).

About the Sacred Land Film Project:

For 30 years, the Sacred Land Film Project has produced documentaries, journalism and educational materials—films, DVDs, articles, photographs, school curricula and website content—to deepen public understanding of Indigenous cultures and environmental issues. Our 501(c)3 fiscal sponsor is the nonprofit Earth Island Institute.

About Christopher (Toby) McLeod, Producer/Director:

Toby McLeod circled the globe for five years filming the Standing on Sacred Ground series. McLeod founded the Sacred Land Film Project in 1984 to make high-impact documentary films relevant to indigenous communities and modern audiences. He produced and directed In the Light of Reverence (P.O.V., 2001) and other award-winning documentary films: The Four Corners: A National Sacrifice Area?, Downwind/Downstream, and NOVA: Poison in the Rockies. Awards include the Council on Foundation's Henry Hampton Award, the John de Graaf Environmental Filmmaking Award, a Guggenheim Fellowship for filmmaking and a Student Academy Award in 1983. His first film was The Cracking of Glen Canyon Dam – with Edward Abbey and Earth First! McLeod holds a master's degree from U.C. Berkeley's Graduate School of Journalism and a B.A. in American History from Yale.

About the Protect Kaho'olawe'Ohana: is a grassroots spiritual and cultural Hawaiian organization which works to perpetuate Aloha 'Āina (love and respect of the land) throughout Hawai'i through educational and spiritual activities that heal and revitalize the cultural and natural resources on Kanaloa Kaho'olawe. In the work to heal Kaho'olawe, members strengthen relationships with the land and respect the spirits of the land. On home islands, members work to protect the natural and cultural resources of ancestral lands.
